1. Treatment of Western Medicine and Prognosis

(1) Treatment of Western medicine:

- For instance, CHOP, a common regimen for lymphoma, is made up of cytoxan (cyclophosphamide), adriamycin (hydroxydoxorubicin), oncovin (vincristine), and prednisone. This combination is given in "cycles" (blocks of time). For example, a cycle may be 21 days, and in the case of CHOP, cytoxan, adriamycin and oncovin are given on day 1, prednisone on days 1-5, followed by 16 days off (no treatment), for a total of 21 days, and then it starts over again with the next cycle.

(2) Prognosis of the treatment

2. The side effects of chemotherapy and radiotherapy

The side effects of chemotherapy radiotherapy are caused by the medication's inability to differentiate between tumor cells and healthy cells. Chemotherapy kills rapidly dividing cells, and these are the cells where we see the side effects. A few of the more common side effects.

Radiotherapy may cause tired, skin soreness, anemia, weight lose, low sex drive, emotional disorders.

Generally speaking, there are following side effects of Western Medicine:

(1)hair lost, skin rashes, bleeding:

(2)digestive system:

(3)hematopoietic system

(4)reproductive system

(5)immuno–depression

(6)Nervis & spirit system: pain, function disorders of organs, emotional disorders

● Late Side Effects of Therapy

More recently, doctors have become aware of chemotherapy's ability to cause long-term side effects. Whereas most side effects occur in the days to weeks after treatment, long-term side effects occur 5, 10, 20 or more years after treatment.

Some of the long term side effects include: infertility, heart disease (high blood pressure and elevated cholesterol), lymphedema, osteoporosis, chronic pain or neuropathy, decreased lung capacity, loss of saliva or tear production, growth issues, and secondary cancers caused by the treatment for the first cancer.
